WHO News

In his regular media briefing, WHO Director-General stated that despite the improving situation in Europe, the situation worldwide is becoming worse. For countries that are seeing positive signs, he warned that “the biggest threat now is complacency” and encouraged continuous surveillance as well as strengthening of fundamental public health measures (isolate, test, trace and quarantine).

The Director-General also showed support for the global movement against racism and urged those protesting to keep a 1-metre distance from one another as best as possible, maintain hand hygiene and wear a mask.

The Pan American Health Organization (PAHO) has published a guide with advice on how to reduce transmission of COVID-19 among indigenous populations, Afro-descendants and other ethnic groups. These vulnerable groups face challenges including high poverty levels and lack of access to sanitation. The PAHO guide aims to promote hygiene, social distancing and improving access to health services in the community.

WHO has published 14 new posters on community and risk engagement during COVID-19, including keeping calm and managing stress, keeping children safe online and family budgeting in times of financial stress.
